My research project examines the impact of women's organizations support through economic empowerment or/ and employment on female victims of gender-based physical spousal violence and their relationship with the perpetrator in Egypt. I aim to address the impact of economic empowerment of female survivors` gender-based attitude. Using an intersectional approach including a structural violence approach, this project shall interrogate the structural causes of the decision of female victims of gender-based physical spousal violence to report their abuses in Egypt after 2011. This research would allow us to efficiently examine how to increase reporting and aid in drafting a bill that would not only criminalize this violence but offer victims' support and protection as well. It is a project to assess how the intervention could be to increase the likelihood of reporting by survivors of gender-based spousal violence and in turn, effectively challenge the crime.
